

BULL SHOALS-WHITE RIVER STATE PARK

In the Ozark Mountains of northern Arkansas, visitors discover one of the finest fishing and boating destinations in the nation—Bull Shoals Lake. A dam constructed across the White River in 1951 formed this 45,440-acre lake that stretches along 720 miles of scenic, rugged shoreline with waters in both northern Arkansas and southern Missouri.

At the southern edge of the lake at the Bull Shoals Dam site is 732-acre Bull Shoals-White River State Park. Bull Shoals Lake and the White River together form an angler's paradise. In addition to lunker bass, crappie and bream in the lake, the clear cold water of the river tempts both bank and float fishing enthusiasts with its nationally-known fighting rainbow and brown trout.

But this area of the state offers even more than boating and fishing. Travel winding roads through the scenic, rugged Ozark terrain where wild rushing streams and rivers, gushing springs and scenic trails abound. From the flowering dogwoods in springtime to the flaming fall foliage in autumn, from the sun-soaked days of summer to the magic of wintertime in the mountains, the seasonal natural beauty of this area captivates artists, photographers and vacationers who enjoy scenic beauty and outdoor recreation.

AREA ATTRACTIONS

Located little more than a leisurely hour's drive south of Bull Shoals-White River State Park is a unique attraction, the Ozark Folk Center State Park, the only park in America dedicated to perpetuation and interpretation of the heritage of the Ozark region. Just a few miles from the Ozark Folk Center is Blanchard Springs Caverns operated by the USDA Forest Service. Tours of this magnificent living cave, where an underground river flows, are offered daily. A short drive away, canoeists can float the nation's first national river, the renowned, scenic bluff-lined Buffalo National River.
