OLD DAVIDSONVILLE STATE PARK

Among the stately oak trees lining the banks of the Black River and the lovely surrounding woodlands, visitors will discover Old Davidsonville State Park. Located in the northeastern foothills of the Ozark Mountains in Randolph County, Old Davidsonville sits near the confluence of the Black River and the Eleven Point and Spring Rivers.

HISTORY

Old Davidsonville State Park preserves the site of historic Davidsonville, a small town established in 1815 as the seat of Lawrence County which comprised roughly the northern third of Arkansas at that time. Commonly known as the location of Arkansas's first courthouse, post office and land office, Davidsonville flourished through both trade and travel along the Black River and the Old Military Road from St. Louis to Texas. Around 1829, the town began to decline quickly when the county seat was relocated and as more favorable trade routes were established which bypassed its location. Little is known of Davidsonville's history after 1829, other than continued activity on the river. Today there are few remains to be seen above the ground.

The Old Davidsonville townsite and surrounding lands were designated as a state park in 1957 to preserve the historical remnants and natural environment of the area.

In order to learn more about the town's past, the Arkansas Archeological Survey and the A.A. Society, in cooperation with Arkansas State Parks, conducted test excavations in the summers of 1979 and 1980. A surveyor's plat (map) of the original town (housed in the archives at Powhatan Courthouse State Park along with other primary source material) was used in locating the remains of homes and businesses at the site. The archeological investigations recovered pieces of plates and cups, crumbled bricks and mortar, plus trash pits, old tools and personal items such as buttons and combs. These material remains, along with available documentary sources such as deeds, birth and death certificates, marriage records, and newspaper articles, are continually being used to compile a picture of life at Davidsonville in the early 19th century.

INTERPRETIVE SERVICES

Programs \blacklozenge A park interpreter provides programs year-round. Depending upon the season, include

Exhibits \blacklozenge A permanent exhibit was installed in the Visitor Center in 1990. The exhibit presents the story of Davidsonville and displays a representative sampling of actual artifacts found during the archeological excavations.

More recently, wayside exhibits were installed along the barrier-free 1/2 mile Historic Townsite Trail in Old Davidsonville. A brochure entitled Davidsonville Discovered will help you learn more about this historic town and let you take home a bit of Arkansas history.
